NATIONAL LIFE CALLS SOLDIERS

Holland Claims Returning Veterans Will Easily Find Employment.

The late Gen. Grenville Mellen Dodge, who played a leading part in the survey and construction of the Union Pacific Railroad, and was, when he died, the surviving major general in the Union army, was accustomed to speak in the latter years of his life when he visited New York of an experience of his own in building the Union Pacific Railroad after peace came in 1865. Gen. Dodge retired in 1881 from active service as surveyor and constructing engineer on the Union Pacific in order that he might enter the army. When the war was ended he returned to that railroad service, having had in mind during all of his campaigns the renewal of work upon the Union Pacific. He it was who interested Abraham Lincoln in the proposed Pacific Railroad.

Lincoln visited Council Bluffs, which was Gen. Dodge's home, professionally, having been retained in an important law case involving certain questions which arose in the vicinity of Council Bluffs.

Soldiers Built Union Pacific.

It is also Gen. Dodge, while the war was in progress, often consulted President Lincoln respecting the Union Central railroad project, for he knew General Elihu Root, who was interested in the plan. It was due to Gen. Dodge that Lincoln recommended announcing that it legislate so as to employ first mortgage bonds which him in 1861 sent then held to become part of the capital issue for that limb of the Union Pacific to complete the road. Congress favorably upon this suggestion at the time when Congress was considering this proposition that Lincoln said to Gen. Dodge:

"When the war was ended many soldiers would be found employing and the Union Pacific could furnish a great deal of employment for them."

From Both Armies.

Therefore Giblyn who served in the Confederate side by side and Paramore who served so far as goes to concerned for those who were serving in the line.

Picture, however, was only an incident accompaniment. Dodge spoke of as not remarkable feature associated with the civil war. There had been colonel when it was known that Dodge had speedily restored to various regiments of the army some who had come on the other, who were serving in the army.

Dodge said these soldiers absorbed in the various regiments of the army and the places that knew them before the war or other places were filled by them and they were speedily enabled to carry on the war.

construction work which the close of the war made necessary.

Work Waiting Now.

Many have been the conjectures respecting the employment of the American soldiers, all of whom in a year probably will be honorably discharged, and many of whom are now ready to accept em- ployment. "Will the return of these soldiers embolden or encourage labor conditions?" is a question that has often been asked. But there are now evidences that these present-day American soldiers will as quietly, as unnoticeably, as was the case in 1865, be absorbed into peaceful pursuits. Already there begins a demonstration that this is to be the fact and that by January 1, 1920, the men who were soldiers in 1917 and 1918 will be busily occupied in truly remunerative employment.

John H. Rich, who is a federal representative in the ninth federal reserve district, has communicated to friends in New York some facts which have come under his knowledge respecting labor conditions in that far-reaching region of the Northwest which already furnishes a small part of our food products and much of our mineral production, especially iron, copper and gold, to a considerable extent, gold and silver.

Northwest Calls For Men.

Mr. Rich tells his friends in New York that all the adjustments which appear to be necessary in meeting the labor situation are proceeding smoothly, uninterrupted and satisfactorily. This great district is now beginning to call for a number of men who have recently been honorably discharged from the army. Not the slightest indication of unemployment has appeared in this district. The return of these men has been well discounted and a substantial proportion of those who have been in service are being taken back into their

CHICAGO GRAIN.

By JOSEPH F. PRITCHARD.

Chicago, Jan. 15.—The weight of Argentine corn in the Chicago market today was again liberal holding, against the grain of the Southern continent and the selling was led by Liverpool and London concerns. English handbills are short goodly amounts of the grain futures in Chicago, while the sales for domestic account were 120,000 bushels and prices were unchanged to leeward.

These speculators endeavor to pick out the hard spots on which to place their corn, but it was noted that they had been so few that the market downward and sold off the grain that could be obtained without a big price loss.

Prices were oil as much as 30¢ on the selling but before the close of the market, there were reports and advances from the lowest levels and the prices showed net gains of 5¢/bushel for the day.

There were advances of 5¢/bushel in the oats market, partially in sympathy with the strength in corn, but mainly because of the lack of selling pressure and the covering by shorts. Com-
